

OUR MEMBER WINERIES are dedicated to creating premium, award-winning wines suitable for every palate principally using grapes harvested within the federally recognized Seneca Lake viticultural area. Furthermore, the Seneca Lake Wine Trail and its member wineries are committed to enhancing the region's economy and quality of life through a variety of innovative and cooperative events and programs year round. Since our organization's founding in 1986 we have become a popular winery and grape growing destination in the Finger Lakes Region as well as the eastern United States. With more than 30 member wineries, our Trail rivals the wine producing regions of California and Europe.

Look for these roadside signs along the Trail to help identify our member wineries.

MEMBER WINERIES

To help make it easier to find our member wineries, we have included the miles from one winery to the next, starting with Ravines Wine Cellars and going south, around the lake and back up the east side of the lake, counterclockwise. For example, it is approximately 6.9 miles from White Springs Winery to Fox Run Vineyards.

A BRIEF HISTORY

OF THE SENECA LAKE WINE TRAIL

The Seneca Lake Wine Trail,

located in the heart of the Finger Lakes Region in western New York State, is one of the largest cohesive wine trails in North America, and is currently home to over thirty different member wineries that routinely win prominent awards and accolades for a wide variety of the food-friendly wines they craft each season. Our member wineries pride themselves on both the diversity of wines they carefully make, as well as the many different styles of tasting rooms positioned all around Seneca Lake.

While our member wineries are excellent, award-winning producers of some of the world's finest wines, visitors to our region should appreciate the member wineries' commitment to the appellation. Over 60% of the wine sold in each of our members' tasting rooms is derived from fruit harvested within the federally recognized Seneca Lake viticultural area: meaning that our wineries create wine that captures and reflects our unique terroir, rather than using juice purchased from other grape growing regions.

The Iroquois were the first to utilize the microclimates created by the lake's varying water temperatures. The Iroquois' fruit crops flourished. Later, European settlers planted only what they needed to survive or use for local barter, until the opening of the Erie Canal. Backyard fruit trees and arbors quickly grew into commercial orchards and vineyards. The Finger Lakes' earliest vineyard on record belonged to the Reverend William Boswick. In 1829, Boswick grew Catawba and Isabella grapes in his rectory garden located in Hammondsport, New York on the southern tip of Keuka Lake. He distributed cuttings to parishioners and soon offshoots from his vineyards spread throughout the region.

In 1866, the western shores

SENECA LAKE HAS BECOME A POPULAR WINERY AND GRAPE GROWING DESTINATION IN THE FINGER LAKES REGION AS WELL AS THE EASTERN UNITED STATES.

of Seneca Lake became home to its first winery, the Seneca Lake Grape Wine Company. The winery planted 100 acres of grapes. At the time, it was the largest vineyard in the state. By 1869 they were producing 14,000 gallons of Seneca Lake's first commercial wine.

Then, in 1882, New York State opened its Agricultural Experiment Station in Geneva, New York located at the north end of Seneca Lake. Its grape breeding and research programs helped to cement Seneca Lake as a prominent player in the grape growing industry. By 1900 there were over 20,000 acres of vineyards throughout the Finger Lakes and more than 50 wineries.

In 1920, the era of Prohibition strongly impacted the wine and grape growing industries. Only the largest wineries were able to survive by making grape juice and sacramental wine. The total area of Finger Lakes' vineyards was cut in half, and many of the vineyards that remained were replanted to produce grape varieties popular for juice, or for the fresh fruit market, substantially reducing the industry.

When Prohibition was repealed, the wine and grape growing industry remained a shadow of its former self. The Seneca Lake Grape Wine Company had by then folded, and area farmers struggled to survive in a much reduced New York State market.

The next significant change for the Seneca Lake grape growing and wine producing industry occurred during the late 1950s and 1960s. Two young European viticultural pioneers named Charles Fournier and Dr. Konstantin Frank began to research and experiment with Vinifera grapes in the Finger Lakes Region. Fournier and Frank's research led them to Seneca Lake where they found the most favorable microclimates conducive for growing Vinifera grapes. In the early 1970s, Fournier planted 20 acres of Vinifera on the east side of Seneca Lake. At the same time, a German native named Hermann Wiemer bought and planted 140 acres of Vinifera on the west side of Seneca Lake. The success of these two vineyards, along with the establishment of a wine research program at the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station in Geneva helped to start the revitalization of Seneca Lake in both the grape growing and wine producing industry.

In 1976, New York State passed the Farm Winery Act reforming tax and marketing regulations to encourage grape growers to expand into the wine production business.

Finally, in 1977 - after more than 60 years- Seneca Lake became home to its first new winery: Glenora Wine Cellars. Soon to follow were Wagner Vineyards, Herman J. Wiemer Vineyard and Hazlitt 1852 Vineyards.

Since that time, Seneca Lake has become a popular winery and grape growing destination in the Finger Lakes Region as well as the Eastern United States. With more than 30 wineries located on Seneca Lake's shores, Seneca Lake rivals wine regions of both California and Europe. In 1986, the Seneca Lake Wine Trail was formed to help better market the member wineries, as a consolidated destination, pooling their resources and creating various wine and food pairing events, among other functions, to help introduce more people to our excellent wines and wineries.
